

Feedage.com Announces Move to Newer, Faster Web Servers.

Feedage.com is a fully categorized and searchable Real Simple Syndication (RSS) directory. Each feed can be easily subscribed to using your favorite RSS reader.

Wharton, NJ May 1, 2008 – Feedage.com a leading RSS Directory announced today the upgrade of its server equipment.

To better serve the growing number of users, Feedage.com has moved to new servers hosted by ServerBeach. The state-of-the-art servers and network infrastructure will allow Feedage.com to continue to increase the large number of RSS feeds in the directory and the number of subscribed users while significantly improving performance.

“The performance increase results in faster response times leading to a better end-user experience.” said Mark Savoca, founder of Feedage.com. Designed with growth for the future, the new hardware will support the rapidly growing number of RSS feeds and users. Improved network and system reliability will result in higher system availability.
